Mother of All Parliaments Votes to Set Sail Over the Horizon

The mother of all Parliaments has voted to pack up and take its democracy elsewhere. It was clearly being wasted on the European Union.

After a marathon parliamentary session which saw 127 hours of continuous heated name-calling and jockeying for position, the exhausted house voted to throw out all Brexit options and hold a further Non-Binding Referendum. Striking a consensus on the wording of this referendum has been contentious. The only resolution that all could agree on to extend the Article 50 declaration indefinitely was a simple 'Wadever' and 'I don't really care'. It is hoped, the entire problem will be eclipsed by some other catastrophe. PROJECT FEAR which was excoriated so effectively by hardline Brexiteers was handily transformed itself into PROJECT HYSTERIA by the Neo-Moggs. Now the PM is banking on PROJECT LOATHING as a solution to thirty months of determined bickering. As the new Minister of Something Else Bojo rejoined, "The rewards of Brexit will be titanic for those who dare to dream!" Many are relieved that the non-existent Reports on the effects of Brexit upon 58 Sectors of the non-existent economy have been permanently shelved on non-existent shelves. The legal advice on the Backstop Agreement has also been consigned to oblivion. The effects of each type of Brexit have been calculated to 3 decimal points by the helpful Treasury which delivered its Christmas surprise at the height of the debate. As Rees-Pooch, the newly appointed Minister for Rational Rationing explained 'They would have been wrong anyway - just look at what happened at Agincourt. At least these recent machinations in parliament have heartily affirmed the British public's united desire to rid the body politic of any taint of expertise on any subject.'

Joyeux Noel de la Ville Lumiere!

While the rest of the world glumly hunkers down in joyless scrums engaged in an austerity Christmas season, battling for trinkets for loved ones, the French President has united his country in a great outburst of participatory pre-Christmas esprit. Not since the heady days of Robespierre has the nation been so united in national pride, donning their dusty sans culottes and gilets jaunes.

Mini guillotines have been installed on every corner and streets have been set ablaze with innovative festive lighting that surpass all their would-be rivals. Macy's parade, and the Odessa Santa festival, look desperately provinciale in comparison. Police participation has been key to the success of the festivities. Brexetians will lament that in their country, where police rarely venture out except in Armadillo formation, such festive spirit never quite gets off the ground. But in Paris they have always done things differently. Earlier this year the post World Cup frenzy proved an effective warm up for the current Christmas extravaganza. As in all the best sports there are two teams which give the whole country alternatives to root for. Festive elves dressed in hi-viz 'gilets jaunes' can bask photogenically beside any conflagration and attract maximum press attention. The Police, alternatively, are dressed to the neufs, panto villains in lugubrious gilets noirs with heavy armour and reflective helmets. They carry a variety of exotic devices which provide splendid pyrotechnics and a riveting soundtrack. As 'baddies' they rush about dousing the streets with water-cannon and prodding the crowds into ever more hysterical action with plumes of tear gas.

Some Brexetians look on sadly and rue the scrapping of Boris' water-cannons, bought as a job lot from Germans (whose sense of humour does not accommodate watersports) To think that the streets of London could have hosted such feux de joie! Ever practical, la Ville Lumiere has electronically tagged every one of its cobblestones with a GPS indentivity so that it can be restored to position for the Paris au Printemps fete touriste.

Satire has Gone the Way of the Satyr!

In the face of the worrying onslaught of fake news, the Odessa Oracle and Abergavenny Aberrant have united to agree a joint editorial policy, pledging to go 100% Satire Free and printing only rigorously fact-checked information. Their editorial boards have undertaken the Nobel News Pledge to provide sources of news that will not mislead susceptible minds. All news items will be checked to ensure that they are Satire Free and compliant with the highest standards of journalistic practice and the lowest IQ's of the reading public. All attempts at hyperbole or exaggeration will be rooted out and replaced by cute kitten photos. In these days of contagious victimhood, it is important to explore the true dimensions of your particular affliction and differentiate it from others who are less burdened. But even the #metoo movement which has enjoyed such popularity over the past year is rapidly being eclipsed by a powerful #waseverthus countermovement. So too, #itoldyouso & #likeaisaidyoudiot have managed to crowd out legitimate grievances with an onslaught of hyperbole. We just say 'No to All That!' and promise our readers a 100% satire free experience.

The Caravan

by the AberBard

A caravan is coming, it will batter down your door.

The terror is numbing as they jostle to the fore.

They rumble 'cross the deserts and they choke the mountain pass

This mighty horde of discontents, with no regard for class.

They are mustered for invasion and to plunder all our jobs

Quite deaf to all persuasion, and our feeble plaintive sobs.

Breaching walls and borders and brooking no restraint.

Overturning our world order, and outsmarting every feint.

Their shiny foreign faces belie their blackguard souls

Without our airs and graces, they've outsmarted human trolls.

Oh! It's the robots that I talk of, that are grabbing every job

All your struggles they make mock of,
it's your children they will rob.

Resistance is mere talkery, 'gainst invasion of these bots.

Our privacy, a mockery, they've already read our thoughts.

Fomenting revolution breaching useless walls and locks

There is only one solution, - that is turning back their clocks!

'SHOWBOATING' A Watchword for 2018

As a culmination of 2018, the G20 afforded a perfect opportunity for world leaders to come together and 'Showboat' while NOT meeting each other or addressing issues of international concern. Around the world resurgent 'nationalist' leaders have been falling over themselves to get away from home and revel in hyper-secure enclaves where, cocooned in relative safety, they can cast the blame firmly on reviled foreign influences, whether they be battering at their distant borders or writing for the Washington Post.

This august convocation is all about optics and affords these leaders and strong men an opportunity to show how awful their counter-parts really are. In well-secured luxury settings they can fine-tune their cameo appearances to deliver a 'halo effect' for their peoples back home. Leaders always like to up the ante before setting off for the fiesta perhaps by closing down borders or invading their neighbours so that they will have issues to not talk about.

Abergavenny, the newly minted capital of Lesser Brexetia, is vying to host the next G20 Meeting. But following DAVOS and the G20 debacles, many of the world showboats have begun to view such get-togethers with growing suspicion. (The leaders of the Republics of London and Scotland have already declined to attend.)

Abergavenny Council is promising 'gold standard' security arrangements, proposing to evacuate all citizens to create a secure, terrorist free zone (TFZ) for showboat luminaries. At least all are usually able to agree on one unified message: that the United Nations is for the B List.

Caravan of Migrants Poised at Pointe au Baril

A Caravan of migrants and generally bad dudes, here depicted trying to look pathetic in front of a Wall, has been reported to be amassing in Pointe au Baril. Following the dissolution of ISIS, disaffected malcontents and terrorists have been gathering at strategic Pointes around the world. This group is known to include climate change terrorists, writer/propagandists, feminist artists, alternative energy scientists, mining engineers, architects known to practice Revit, Arabic speakers and people recently in Honduras.- not to mention that they are bringing their trained attack dogs! They must be stopped!

Every year the Odessa Coutouriers exhibit the extraordinary products of their imaginations in a massive exhibition that is held in the reception area of Millhaven Correctional. This year some of the biggest names have again produced astonishingly award winning work.

The Freakshake Phenomenon!

Food Porn on Steroids
Taking inspiration from the Ice-cream parlours that flank Bondi Beach in Australia, where hunky Bruces and curvaceous Sheilas like to flaunt their asse(t)s, the Freakshake Fenomenon has now invaded all major cities worldwide and infiltrated every corner of societies dedicated to conspicuous consumption. They present big business opportunities that cater to impecunious millennials. In some cases the Pokemon Gym Freakshake has led to flash mobbing with massive queues to get into wanna-be-there venues. Mountains of whipped cream crowned by marshmallows, deep-fried mars bars and heart attack sprinkles have become a new norm in most up and coming gourmet venues. Freakshakes often contain up to 45 tablespoons of sugar, a week's allocation of calories which will have to be worked off by extra-ordinary means. These sensations are being marketed NOT to greedy children whose eyes are bigger than their stomachs, but to Instagram addicted adults who want to flaunt their excesses which must be counter-balanced by gruelling physical regimes. They need to resort to sugar highs to keep their performance at peak power. Such Instagram Olympians grant themselves licence to consume such drinks and yet remain ripped because of their high-performance lifestyles. Nutritionists calculate that with 17,500 calorie average hit, it will be necessary for a Sheila to undertake 17 ½ hours of aggressive vacuuming to compensate. A typical Bruce or Giles will need to do at least 1200 extra chin ups.

A Permanent Full Eco-Moon over Kingston?

Following the success of the perpetual full moon suspended over Chengdu in China, other 'world class' cities are rushing to follow suit with their own continuous daylighting schemes. The new, improved Chengdu moon is four times the size of the old full moon and up to 8 times as bright, providing a high level of nighttime illumination. This obviates the need for street lighting throughout the city. In a win-win agreement with local sponsors, the Chengdu Moon pays for itself with advertising space that rents for astronomical sums. Continuous updates on the Chengdu Stock exchange quoted stock are flashed up as well. The first of its kind, the Chengdu Moon has drawn poets and 'visioneers' from all around the planet to describe its unmitigated loveliness and enthuse about its sustainability aspects. Typically, Paris has been one of the first cities to jump on the bandwagon. However other cities have been quick to explore options and the Kingston Frontenac area is contemplating installing a Mega-Moon of its own which will provide high quality of light throughout the year and help to alleviate the winter SAD season. Currently Alibaba and Amazon are vying for the advertising rights. Alibaba is even assessing the viability of Multiple Moons as an alternative, suggesting that they may be able to target advertisement to suit local tastes. Green activists however are campaigning to thwart the scheme critical of the necessity to cut down all trees within city boundaries. They also suggest that the unremitting moon may play havoc with animals' diurnal clocks and that we will have birds dropping out of the sky in sheer exhaustion.

The Full Moon has become as iconic as the Eiffel Tower in La Ville Lumiere

Virtual Prisons

Following research into deviant behaviour at Portsmouth University in Great Brexetia, many prisons around the world are leaping onto a lucrative bandwagon. They are throwing their gates open to welcome researchers who plan to undertake extensive studies that require stable long-term test populations. Many prisoners have signed up for the new Virtual Reality studies which allow them to continue to inhabit virtual copies of the worlds that had initially sparked their social deviance. By monitoring their performance in these virtual environments psychologists hope to better understand the mental processes that have led to anti-social behaviour such as mass murder and paedophilia. Portsmouth University has developed a detailed virtual community called 'Nadirville' in which innocent children frolic in unguarded playgrounds and feckless adults congregate in bunches awaiting the attentions of a mass murderer. Cheerful school kids cluster on corners in prime locations ripe for acid attack and knife crime. In the 'Nadirville Experience' the virtual prisons offer a sunny, open-door policy. Prisoners are encouraged to come and go at will (having throttled the Virtual guards). In 'reality reality', the prisoners are engaged within a 'sensorium', a space efficient environment where they are able to carry out their fantasies under the watchful eyes of the clinical psychologists. Prisoners are incentivised to participate in this flag-ship program with promises of reduced sentences and early parole among other perques.

Today's Youth seek a more discombobuated life experience

Following the launch of Neom World Class City in the Gulf by the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia, governments around the world are rushing to cash in on the Power of Positive Climate Change. Cities located in desert wastelands are proving to be the ultimate 'no-brainer'. Brexetian planners envision a throbbing new heart in the Midlands Desert. Sun,

Face-city

Helping Facetians to Feel at Home

Sex, Security are a ringing endorsement of Face-City which has positioned itself in a hurricane path to take advantage of wind power coupled with rock bottom real estate values.

As at Neom, talented developers start from scratch and tailor their own regulations and laws to suit their clientele. They thrive on the current trend for disintermediation, the removal of all the tiresome middle men and expertise that stands between gratifying your desires and your pocketbook.

Face-City is a joint project sponsored by Face-Media and the legendary Yevtulaev Brothers of Minsk. They have envisioned the worlds first 'computer printed' megalopolis which is staffed by a service corps of robots, obsequious and obliging and requiring no immigration papers.

In the rush to prove eligibility for inclusion in the Face-city Launch, candidates must score high in a rigorously assessed qualifications assessment in which 'beautiles' are allocated to every aspect of their hum-drum lives.

The Beautile is a revolutionary concept which was originally perfected in cities like Chengdu in the Peoples Republic of China, where the value of each individual is rigorously assessed making reference to their spending profiles and attitudes. Optimal residents score particularly high on their media access habits.

Citizens who have platinum level 'value added' status are rewarded with coveted consumer items such as jewellery, luxury consumables, sumptuary privileges and free Pepsi. Facetians enjoy automatic segregation from all elements that might reduce their sense of personal worth. They will receive a carefully crafted view of the world to reinforce their personal tastes and predilections.

The Brexiteer celebrants in Parliament has organised seed funding for the EX-EUphoria Festival which is planning an extended celebration in the wake of Brexetia's success in releasing itself from the shackles of Europe.

'This will be a massive moment. It means that Brexetia will be throwing its doors open to the world, inviting all those foreigners to come and celebrate with us and showcase our core Brexetian values' trills Jacob Rees-Pooch, the appointed Royal Master of Ceremonies. We will be drawing on talent from all over the planet, including the Queen who is now fully booked out for this 60 day extravaganza with an exhausting programme of Trooping the Colour for foreign dignitaries and whoever shows up. The imperial state carriage dating from the coronation of George I, known affectionately as 'The Dowager's Mite', is currently being restored to its former pre-EU glory and the legendary teams of Windsor greys, will be deployed non-stop to convey Royals and foetid state guests to and from the spectacular planned events. Her Majesty and Princesses Meghan and Kate will be handed a challenging itinerary of Trooping the Colour relentlessly through the streets of London. Highlights will be held at the O2 centre, which will showcase Strictly Morris, a star-studded clash of Morris dancing troupes which will debunk once and all perfidious claims that Morris was a corruption of foreign 'Moorish' dancing.

The recent explosion of Wicca and Druidic practices, rendering these the fastest growing religions in the Royal Realm will culminate in huge celebrations at Stonehenge and Avebury during the vernal equinox and reaffirm our roots in stone age culture. Pomp and ceremony that has been suppressed by perfidious Euro-diktat since Roman times will again flourish in Brexetian heartlands. The festival will also provide an opportunity to hearken back to the days of the Great Empire, when Brexetia truly ruled the slaves. There will be regular re-enactments of the Last Night of the Proms and the ever popular 'Piccaninny Singalongs' led by the Minister for Happiness and Wellbeing, Boris Johnson.

OPERATION SKITTLES

Building on the huge success of 'Operation Skittles' the latest crime abatement strategy of London's Metropolitan Police, the rulebooks for policing are being revised in towns throughout Brexetia. The Skittles initiative has seen police officers in high powered, heavy armed attack vehicles, chasing down drive-by moped muggers and gently prodding them so that the drivers bite the dust. The program has been astonishingly successful and the incidence of moped mugging has dropped by over 40% within last year alone. There is very little recidivism and the police are often able to sell unclaimed mopeds for scrap. The thrill of the chase has drawn many new recruits into a force which had been desperate to pitch itself as an exciting lifestyle choice. A lot of candidates who were once branded 'the problem' have now become a key part of the solution to that problem. The average speed of motor travel through the city, which has languished for over half a century at 7 miles per hour, worse than at the time of Queen Victoria's diamond Jubilee, has suddenly shot up to an astonishing 84mph.

Salvator Mundi

Just got Flipped !

Last year Christies sold the Salvator Mundi to Crown Prince Mohamad Bin of Salmonela for almost half a billion dollars. The Crown Prince had hosted a party at the Ryadh Ritz for 159 members of his extended family in an drive to raise funds for this masterpiece. The painting was originally bought for a mere $45 from a penniless count whose family had been gifted it by Charles II.

Due to adverse criticism of the vapid countenance and lack of prefrontal capacity of the restoration, the Crown Prince has authorised da Vinci to undertake further improvement which has allowed him to trade it up for a yacht valued at £500 million and a 300 room Chateau near Paris, both part of a job lot. The painting has gone into the private collection of his brother MbZ and will never be seen again. The DOTUS has recently given his stamp of approval for the Crown Prince's unorthodox culturo/philanthropic ventures "He may be a sick puppy, but at least he's our sick puppy."

MBS had no room for more art in his Paris chateau Boneville - nor on his ship, Serene Wahabi Breeze.

Resisting Dublin's Brazen Charms

As Europe's new English speaking financial capital, visitors from around the world are seeking out the 'real Dublin's Fair City', revelling in the cockles and muscles with the ghost of Molly Malone (etc.) Intended to ringfence the Celtic Tiger, the Irish / Brexetia border has at last been secured with 42,000 miles of electronic techno-fencing under U.N. control. Large camps of economic migrants keen to experience the 'luck of the Irish' have formed north of the border. Brexetian migration into the Republic is administered on a strict merit points basis, and merit less than £500,000 is often deemed lacking. But Dublin's Fair City which operates an open door policy for high net worth individuals is working hard to make the London ex-pats refugees feel at home in the local culture. Here is just a soupcon of some of the brazen landmarks strategically located around the city to help visitors orient themselves. The city is indeed a veritable trove of revenants.

Designer A.I.

With the first designer babies currently flooding the production lines in China, international entrepreneur Melon Musq has stepped forward to offer a counter initiative promising that in future intelligence enhancements will be simply implanted at his network of A.I medical enhancement facilities. This is considered by many a more democratic response than gene sequencing and manipulation which tends to restrict free-choice and does not allow the client to make shiz own rational decisions about gender and self-marketing strategies. With the launch of his new company 'Spaz-cadex' Musq envisions that his success in producing Mandarin Speaking trombone virtuosi. (MSTV's) These are intended to demonstrate the deficiencies of Sino gene splicing research which he claims is not sufficiently targeted to meet this current product demand.

'Spaz-cadex' has produced simple pre-programmed implants which can be inserted effortlessly into the peri-preturbium and which will transform character overnight, allowing recipients of his patented technology to get off on the right foot from blast-off. "Our patient, 'Ms Floribunda Zee' (not her real name) woke up the very next morning to find herself babbling fluently in Mandarin and with an irrepressible desire to play the trombone, an instrument with which she was previously unfamiliar. She is currently launching an interesting career taking her talents into the heart of China with engagements via the Belt and Road - "hardly what those Sino-imperialists anticipated", Musq chuckles jocularly.

clients will be able to make rational decisions on what they wish to bring to market and adjust their expectations to what they can afford.

"This will be good for the economy and make us all more reactive and fit for the fray. The 'Spaz-cadex' concept is totally market driven, which is what I like". Musq cites his recent implant

It Just Ain't Cricket!

Entomophagy is emerging as the culinary wave of the future. In Brexetia, many people, suddenly conscious of their unsustainable lifestyles are turning to insect ranching to supply their daily diet with a nutritious high protein ingredients, high in iron, calcium and Potassium (ICK)

It is estimated that cattle ranching accounts for 26% of the planet's productive land, and this does not include lands set aside for growing cattle feed. All-in-all livestock also accounts for 22% of the world's greenhouse gases. It takes 100 pounds of high-quality feed and 2000 gallons of water to produce 20 BigMacs. But bug ranching can produce 4 times the protein on 100 lbs of feed and 1 gallon of water.

That's a lot of bug burgers! Many home ranchers are also particularly appreciative of the heightened food security attendant in having a thriving cricket ranch tucked away under the bed. In countries like Greatish Brexetia where dietary choices have become severely restricted, the attraction of having a wide range of delicious insect options ranging from May Flies to June Bugs that actually like to eat the potatoes and gimpy leeks, has allowed home ranchers to bring back long lost vitality of market towns. Traditional markets such as the one in Abergavenny have been reinvigorated with herds of crickets and locusts being auctioned every weekday. Cricket and June Bug drovers converge on the auction floor where a lively transactional business is conducted. Abergavonians like to say their town is hopping again, just what they voed for in the Referendum!.

Crickets are reputed to have a delicious foresty, nutty flavour, which has been likened by connoisseurs to taking a large bite of the forest floor. Honey ants and dung beetles have their own distinctive nuanced tastes. And all this is before the GM scientists have had a chance to work their magic in improving the productivity of insect strains. Some are now promising honey ants the size of watermelons, meaty cockroaches which favour the desirable prime cuts and dung beetles that have a herd instinct which makes them particularly easy to manage. Insect husbandry can prove a challenge, particularly when your stock is free range. Practical methods for banding cockroaches and fitting electronic location devices to dung beetles are still in their infancy. As a curious by-product of the new passion for Entomophagy, the cattle industry in many of the Welsh valleys is thriving with new strains being genetically adapted to provide a fecund resource for the dung beetle ranchers.

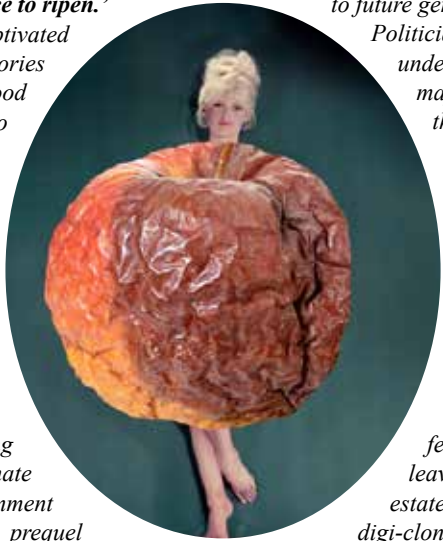

Political Clones

So many trends these days seem to be expanding upon Bridget Bardot's perceptive observation, 'Eat like sucks-triste big-time ziz growing old, but jolie nice to ripen.'

We are all captivated by the latest stories of the Hollywood legends who have created digital clones of themselves so that they will always be remembered at the peak of their powers. These digi-clones are coming to dominate the entertainment market and prequel before prequel comes out in which stars ages are successfully reversed and youthful histories rewritten.

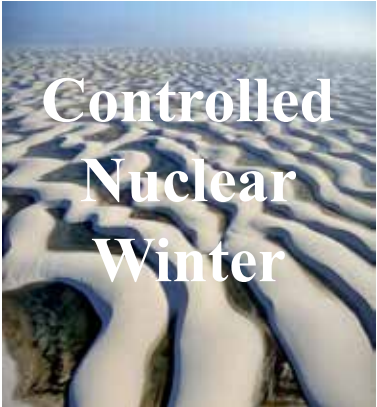

The world can look forward to an unending loop of the currently playing Great American Soap Opera which has captured our hearts and minds since the

Bridget Bardot
'You're only as old as you look'

last millennium. 'The Forever Young and the Beautiful'. But it is not just the rich and famous that are creating digi-clones of themselves to bequeath to future generations.

Politicians, too, have undertaken 'pore level mapping' so that their legacies will survive long into the future. Many look forward to a youthful Boris confronting stoic Theresa for generations to come. Many canny plutocrats are outfoxing feckless progeny and leaving their entire estates to personal digi-clones to ensure the fiscal responsibility of future generations. It is calculated that by 2050, approximately 87% of the world's wealth will be held by such proxy trusts administered by and on behalf of digi-clones, well beyond the reach of feckless human interference.

The new Brexetian Dept. of Food, Environment and Everything Else, (DfEEEE) is joining Enviro EU in a proactive effort to ameliorate climate change. The initiative intends to build on the achievements of EPA, recently rebranded as USEnergy (USE), in their ambitious scheme to tap the Yellowstone super volcano and engineer a slow release of particulate to shield the North American continent from global warming under a stygian haze. Hoping to replicate the famous 'Year without Summer' which followed the 1815 eruption of Mount Tombora in the Pacific, USE is proposing an ingenious piggybacking of dust release from the gigantic lava dome with current fracking initiatives already moving into the area. The new USE Secretary explains that the solutions to environment challenges are serendipitously built right into the problem. Common ground among all these agencies is a quest to find a silver lining to climate change and commercialise solutions that can be rolled out across the planet. Under the umbrella 'It's About Time for Some Positive Climate Change' they are promoting major opportunities for commercial exploitation.

One of the most innovative programmes, Operation Sirocco, is looking at controlled nuclear explosions to be carried out in the Sahel of North Africa. These would eject micro particles into the air which would gently drift northwards on balmy winds and cast a protective umbrella over northern Europe shielding it from the worst excesses of heat gain. Climate sceptics who overstate the disadvantages of curtailing the agricultural growing cycles Europe will be countered by a revised Common Agricultural Policy which will compensate farmers over loss of crop performance within the Control Zone. In effect it is hoped that the Sahel can be re-engineered to act as Europe's thermostat, ensuring optimal conditions at the heart of world civilization. Within our lifetimes it should be possible to fine-tune protective haze cover to ensure constant climate conditions across Europe by accelerating or decelerating the source explosions.

The Mogglydote party currently in vogue in Lesser Brexetia derides climate change sceptics. Jacob Rees-Pooch explains, "Its all about embracing risk. If we had thought science were too risky we wouldn't have dug holes to plant our enemies in in the first place."

Yellowstone - a Valuable Resource Waiting to be Tapped

Electro Meat!

Zapo-Tech's solution to the food crisis

We may shake our heads in horror at the steady plundering of the earth's forests and oceans. But all this is done to provide evermore food for our growing populations. The promise of SCHMEAT or artificially grown meat has not captured the imaginations of consumers. Its high pricing at $30,000 a pound means that it is an affordable option only for the 1% - and these are the very people who are reluctant to turn over large portions of their mega mansions to house the collagen racks that are required to grow the wafer thin SCHMEAT delicacies. It is estimated that removing meat from our diet would liberated 79% of the worlds farmland to allow a re-wilding with aurochs and pachyderms. Finnish researchers have come up with a solution to our food crisis which sounds almost too good to be true. Using electricity from solar panels and hydrogen-oxidising bacteria combined with delicious soupcons of nitrogen, sodium potassium and zinc they can produce a foodstuff that is 60% protein, the balance being a healthy mix of carbs and fats. The bacterial food stuff created requires no microbial starters such as Quorn. Vegetable matter can breath a great sigh of relief! This is a totally pain free production process.

Zapo-Tech Microbial Foods Inc. are banking on an extensive marketing campaign to feed their concept to a hungry world. They are focussing on expanding consumer choice and catering to individual ethnic tastes. Zap-Algae can be customised with as many as 42 different pastel colours to suit the mood you are trying to set. There are 18 different taste sensations as well as 3 distinct textures, gritty, chewy and 'passion pulp'. Altogether this achieves an offering of 2268 options, enough to provide a varied diet over every day in six years.

According to Zapo-Tech research, 20,000 times less land will be required to produce our required protein in comparison to lands required to grow soy and other crops to sustain factory farmed animals.

It's a 'No brainer'!

Gene Warriors

Once considered the bane of human existence, the mosquito is being rehabilitated by genetic scientists as potentially one of mankind's most serviceable allies. In fact, modern labs are breeding new strains of genetically modified mosquitos endowed with a cockroach's tenacity and legendary ability to thrive in hostile, oftentimes radioactive environments, combined with the discriminatory intelligence of animals like human beings.

In the past humanity has lauded our achievements like the eradication of smallpox or Neanderthals. But modern 'gene drives' have much greater scope in their sights. A 'gene drive' is a method of driving undesirable or unattractive species to extinction by ensuring the inheritance of characteristics which will ensure that they peter out. The lemming gene has provided a valuable resource here. Normally genes have a 50:50 chance of being passed on through reproduction. Using 'gene drive' principles to tilt the scales by inserting dummy genetic material, species can be driven to inviable status within a few short generations.

Initial experimentation with the Zika virus has proven surprisingly successful on lab rats and it is proposed to roll out these successes with a long list of deplorables, like rabbits, rats and feral kangaroos. Around the world medical and scientific bodies are drawing up registries of deleterious species ripe for extinction.

And this is where the mosquito proves to be an ally, itself fortuitously retrieved at the last moment from the portal of extinction. New species of mosquito can be endowed with the intelligence to operate simple machinery. A high IQ Super-Mosque can even distinguish between human sub-species through nuances of skin odours indicating cultural diet preferences. A Super-Mosque can infiltrate the most hostile of environments and inoculate its targets with desired genetic modifiers to ensure its timely extinction. Many of the banes of humanity, such as piranhas and quagga mussels lie under the waterline. Scientists are engaging in pioneering new breeds of mosquitos equipped with mini-aqualungs which will allow them to operate at depths inoculating unwanted species with toxins to ensure their rapid decline.

Sand Vests - a long-awaited cure for ADHD

For many years in American schools straitjackets have been used for more problematical ADHD students with a 100% success rate. However, now German schools are pioneering an innovative economic solution to curing children's restlessness. Sand vests stylishly tailored to a student's physique and weighing on average 100 KG have time and again proven to be effective in controlling frenetic classrooms. Now sand vest solutions are beginning to be adopted by Brexetian schools as an effective treatment a the fidgets epidemic. Hastings based Beluga Vest sees further opportunities to roll this out into the wider community of fidgetatious adults. Sand gloves weighing up to 10 Kg each are also now commercially available to address milder cases of the fidgets. They have the unforeseen further advantage of impeding manipulation of mobile devices. Users remark upon an instant improvement in quality of life as soon as they are denied access to social media. The Belugas are also enjoying a vogue among Zen Buddhists and others practicing meditation disciplines.

Hire a Bobby

Local policing 'on-the-beat' has been drastically reduced in recent years due to the re-deployment of all police and army personnel to patrol the Brexetia borders. Pinkie Blinders who started the popular franchise Hire-a-Hubby which capitalises on the dearth of people who can do anything now that the borders are impermeable, has expanded his vision into offering local police services with his new start-up Hire-a-Bobby. Street muggings at gunpoint have become the Number One concern of local residents in many of the ungated communities within our primate cities. Hire-a-Bobby pairs clients who like to sport expensive watches and conspicuous 1% handbags with undercover agents who can spring into action and demobilise any invidious assailant. Hire-a-Bobby can be provided in many guises; from the feeble looking nanny with a pram full of high-grade military equipment to an importuning street beggar dogging your footsteps and drawing attention to your assets. Mr Pinkie explains, "We're beginning to explore the opportunities offered by robotic policing too. HAB is planning to expand our services to include child services. Soon you will be able to send your child to the playground, laden with the latest must-have paraphernalia confident that an attendant bot will ensure the safe protection of all your valuable property."

It's How You Say It

Infantologists have been studying the nature of word formation in the very young and have come up with surprising variations in baby vocabulary across the country. Scottish children tend to be politer and favour words like 'sorry' and 'oh deary me' whereas London's children appear to have less of a grip on politesse when choosing expressions like 'Oi! You!' Cultures often diverge in telling ways. What one child merrily entreats as 'DOGGY' in one part of the country, may come out as 'YUMMY' in other areas which have different dietary preferences. One expression however unites all children whatever their background. 'POO' is thought to be an early expression of an opinion on Brexit.

Re-Norming Society

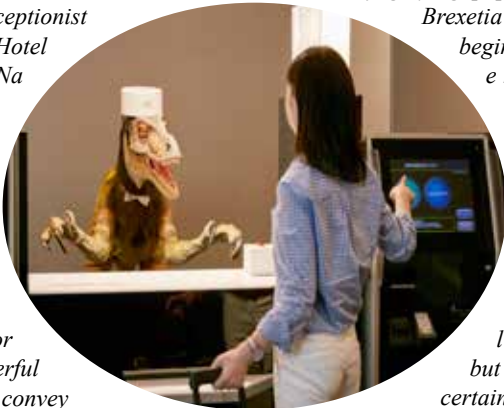

Around the world political leaders are engaged in a mad rush to disconnect the dots in order to establish their progressive new norms. But none can seem to agree what the new norms should be and the public is left rushing from one scene of squalor to the next. There is so much out there, strippers, presidential non-disclosure agreements, Novochuk poisonings, Kremmi News, bone saws, tweet storms, parliamentary parlour games, and loads of made-up stuff. Meanwhile strongmen are grabbing the levers of power on all sides and hitting the jackpot. They are engaged in 'lowering all the bars' so that the kids can serve themselves double measures and totter on board with the programme. As Tsar Vlad beams, "Life is too short to sit around concentrating on stuff." The old myth of 'American exceptionalism' has gone the way of the dodo as nations form Azurbia to Zazastan clamour to be ever more hyper-exceptional. Political circuses like the Bannon and Bailout tour Europe's Big Tops and look forward to the day when all the dots finally explode and we can return to more reliable stone age technology without the fake press. White collar criminals have been turned a blind eye, while the legal systems concentrate on bringing People of Colour Collar criminals to book. Meanwhile the #MeToo movement is locked in mortal combat with the #MeFirst and #Itoldyouso movements. Sadly Stephen Hawking has departed just when we need String Theory to reconnect some of the neo-dots. Today we have replaced old norms of behaviour with celebrity cameos which allow old school ideas of correct behaviour to be held up to ridicule. The public has voted with its feet in the race to embrace the latest asteroid of awfulness whether it fall from the mouth of the DOTUS or some Hollywood luminary. Roving hordes of celebrity paparazzi turn up rocks and shake their heads in delighted disbelief. Old touchstones of probity have been washed off to sea. Even the Pope Francis declines to comment, shrugging a shoulder and muttering "Who am I to judge?"

Japanese Robot Hotel set to open in Abergavenny

With Japan's greying population many jobs are being undertaken by robots. Among the most innovative are the receptionist duties at the Hotel chain Henn-Na which are carried out by robotic dinosaurs. A solicitous Tyrannidon greets you at the door and cheerful velociraptors convey your luggage up to your room. The MacDino's in the front lobby is staffed by a sharp eyed Steggasaur who displays cheekie-chappie characteristics as she accommodates up to 28 burger life-style choices. Japan has experienced some of the problems of greying population which Brexetia is only just beginning to encounter. The older generation of grey hairs are proving inept at carting around stacks of luggage but they are certainly not going to pay young people an extortionate wage to do it for them. So the ideal solution is purchasing an electronic Dinosaur to accomplish all such mundane tasks.

AGGRobots

Lesser Brexetia has placed itself in the forefront of labour innovation in the adoption of Aggrobots to undertake the agriculture that was once managed by pools of cheap migrant labour. There are simply no volunteers available to harvest the leeks and potatoes that have become the healthy new staples of the post-Brexit diet. The latest generation of Aggrobots has achieved a level of sophistication that few agricultural pickers have been able to offer in the past. For instance the Pot-a-bot can distinguish between a potato and up to 10 types of unlicensed berries. It can eliminate pests and vermin by applying precisely targeted and painless taser blasts. Moreover, the latest models can ensure that all harvest is fully licenced and certified with the proper genetic profiles prescribed by Monsanto and Bayer, leaving uncertifiable produce to compost in the ground along with the tasered pests. A well programmed team of aggrobots can strip a field of 99.98% of its nutritional value in a fraction of the time that was historically allocated to the helot harvest. Aggrobots are not without their drawbacks, however, which every major country is struggling to redress. Hackers have successfully thwarted the Russian potato harvest resulting in the rebranding of the country's traditional vodkas as nightshade drinks such as the increasingly popular 'Zdravo Zest' which are just beginning to make substantial inroads into the Brexetian market.

"Now we wait."

Escaping the Corset!

A feminist freedom movement which originated in South Korea is moving with lightning speed around the globe. 'Escape the Corset' has seen millions of women dump their cosmetics drawers onto their menfolk.. In Korea the beauty industry has reached unnatural extremes. The typical Korean women is thought to spend up to 2/3 of her income on beauty products. Plastic surgery has become de rigueur to achieve the coral iridescent skin tones, the cherry blossom eyes and ruby teeth that have become de rigeur. Women are undertaking painful rack treatments and bone grafts to achieve the 9:1 head body ratio considered ideal for Vitruvian women by da Vinci. This, coupled with a palimpsest of perfect tattoos, ensures that there is little time left over to vie with male counterparts for parity in the workplace. Escape the Corset has achieved considerable success in encouraging men to take up a ceaseless battle striving for that perfected body image.

Rogue Agents

Following the current vogue for identification of Rogue Agents as the authors of so much international misery, many business start-ups are racing to cash in on the phenomenon. Rent-a-Rogue has been set up to address a severe shortage of rogue operatives who are trained take up questionable story lines and transfer the media spotlight away from common or garden malefactors and focus it on a more glamorous demi-monde of malefactors operating outside of the law and official party policy. A well placed rogue agent is quickly able to undermine scepticism about fake news stories and help to bring many of the enemy-of-the-people-press organisations to their knees in a soup of spurious claims and bogus counterclaims. Ever since the days of Thomas a Becket rogue agents have been expertly trained to not do their masters bidding.

Renaming Places to Encourage Tourism

For two centuries the Royal Navel College in Greenwich has suffered from an image problem and connotations of introspection that typify student years.

Following a public referendum on rebranding, in which it was decided to rebrand it Umbilicus Brexetius, tourists have been flocking to partake in this updated history. Royal Holloway Prison which once struck terror into the hears of miscreant women, many of whom were hardened television licence evaders, has also been rebranded 'Her Majesty's Pleasure Grounds. All of these initiatives are part of the Brexetia Is Really, Really Open for Business Campaign with its special focus on pageantry and golf courses as prime sources of foreign exchange.

Your Horrorscope

Sponsored this week by the First Unmitigated Nigerian Bank of Offshore Odessa (FUNBOO)

Capricorn 21 December-18 January, 18
If you are a fortunate survivor of the implosion of the Crassula Nebula then you should indulge yourself while you still have time. Differences of opinion are one thing but it is unwise to discuss them with anyone sensible at this stage.

Aquarius 19 January - 17 February
You are living the dream (but it might not be your own) Nevertheless everyone will want to play a part. Perhaps its time to invest in a new dream catcher. Remember what fellow Aquarian Marie Antoinette wryly opined as she mounted the 13 step, "It's never too late to live happily ever after".

Pisces 18 February - 19 March
You did not undertake the good-will tour of North Korea that we advocated last time, so there is very little more we can do to guide you to a better future. You will just have to go on in your own merry way until your are prepared to listen to others' well-intentioned advice. Take time to channel your inner jellyfish.

Aries 20 March - 18 April 1.
The golden rule has been updated to cater to a more modern materialistic audience. 'Do Unto Others' has been revised to "If you've got the gold, then you rule!" Treat yourself to some gold bling to celebrate a timely release. .

Taurus 19 April - 19 May Expect a major breakthrough in a project that you have been harping on relentlessly for years. If you feel that you are short of the actual facts then just make up some alternative ones. The world is you oyster, and you know what they always say about Taureans and oysters!

Gemini 20 May - 20 June, 1.
You were never really cut out to be a chess grandmaster, but you do have a latent talent for Wack-a-Mole which should not go unexplored. Give yourself the gift of time and a large fuzzy hammer to hone this obvious talent.

Cancer 21 June - 21 July
You have an unenviable reputation for being the Jack of all trades but hamster of none. It is time to invest in an exercise wheel and take it for a spin. Though you are hopeless at spotting the real problems this never seems to prevent you from finding a novel solution.

Leo 22 July - 22 August 1.
Pack a can of pepper spray for the next person who suggests that you 'move out of your comfort zone'. They should just be happy with who you are. It wasn't long ago that you felt optimistic about the current pace of events but optimism will only take you so far, a false moustache and high heels will undoubtedly take you much further.

Virgo 23 August - 21 September,
So many things you want to do and so many distractions to set aside. But take a moment to rest on your laurels and invest in that box set of 92 hours of Versailles. You will soon come to realise that your own situation is not quite as bad as you thought. Have you considered joining the bandwagon with the new Freakshake diet? It offers a critical balance of all food groups and is eminently Instagrammable!

Libra 22 September - 22 October
Being a Libra has obvious advantages in todays chaotic world. Everyone is looking for balance and rectitude. So don't be stingy with your natural talents. But remember that there is a difference between being up-to-date and just making up the facts to appear so.

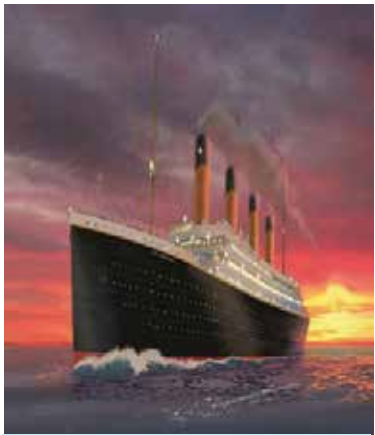

Scorpio 23 October - 21 November
It is rare that anyone accuses you of being too pro-active. But the convergence of Jupiter and the Sun is going to throw up opportunities that are not to be missed. Whatever choices you make, however foolish, you should celebrate taking charge of your life.

Sagittarius 22 Nov. - 20 December
There is an ancient saying in Zen that only when you know enough is enough will you know you've had enough of Zen and can go back to living a normal life. Ice fishing on Svalbard Island anyone?

MEGABOATS

The Megaboat phenomenon continues to capture our imaginations. While some have had chequered histories they nonetheless bring out a certain pride in ownership, especially when docked.

Blind Date

Every week our Life Resources Coach, Samoh Eilriaf, seeks to bridge the chasm between different cultures and bring together people who would not normally have met to enjoy good food and conversation in a venue of their choice.

This week Garumptch, a master chef from Sarawak has joined Sister Bundaflordia, a transgender wiccan missionary from Svalbard at the popular Fenomenonal Freakshake in Great Piggout Street, WC1.

Garumptch on Bunzie:

What were you hoping for?
'In my culture food plays a big part. We like big personalities, people with a substantial presence who command a room, people who get to the meat of the matter. We like to stir the pot a bit and not hold back. Bunzie sure fills that bill on all fronts.

What did you talk about?
We talked a lot about BMI which in Bunzie's case is pretty impressive. Perhaps I went on a bit too much about local food back in Sarawak. But Bunzie has a taste for the exotic and wants to savour other cultures.

Table manners?
No problems with hers. She's very much to my taste!

No Significant Other??

(613) - UHU-GENE

Awkward moments?
Bunzie was resistant to our local custom of feeling up a new acquaintance to assess BMI. This is very important in our people's appreciation of each other.

Would you meet again?
Yep – she's agreed to join me at the airport for a little jaunt back to Sarawak.

Marks out of 10?
I'd give her at least a 47, (heh! heh!) which I figure is also her BMI.

Bunzie on Garumptch:

What were you hoping for?
'Being a transgendered wiccan Svalbardian I was hoping to meet someone with catholic tastes who would really get into me. It is hard for plus size gals to make the right impression on first dates, but I think I carried it off.

What did you talk about?
We talked a lot about his IQ which in Gee's case is endearingly modest.

Table manners?
What table? No problems once they removed the table between us and we lay down on the rug.

Awkward moments?
Though Gee is a very touchy-feeley kind of guy, he was somewhat hesitant to embrace my evangelical determination to bring the word of our Redeemer to Sarawak.

Would you meet again?
Yep – I've already packed my Bible and loincloth to go and visit him in Tenggarong.

Marks out of 10?
I'd give hm at least a 47, (heh! heh!) which I figure is also about his I.Q.

Anthem for New Brexetia
Bunyan's Timely Answer to that Euro-Ode to Joy

We who would valiant be
'Gainst foreign interests.
Let us with Constasy,
Follow our Minstress.
There's no discouragement
Shall make us once relent
Our first avowed intent
To vote hard Brexit.

Though Remoaners beset us round
With dismal stories
They do but themselves confound
Project Fear bores.
No alt-fact can us affright
We knows our Left from Right
At dawn of Brexit light Demanding hard Brexit.

No hobgoblin nor euro-fiend
Shall daunt our spirit
We knows we at the eend
Won't have to share it.
Foreign fancies fly away
Their lingos brag and bray
We'll labour night and day
Under hard Brexit.

Are You Suffering from DOTUS Syndrome?

Are you suffering in silence with symptoms of the deadly DOTUS syndrome? Dotus is evidenced by an irrepressible urge to tune into the latest nadirs of political behaviour despite the obvious damage to your health and wellbeing. It results in a general self-mortification through addiction to unfolding events and inability to withdraw from constant self-dosing on even the most squalid of news sources.

The side effect symptoms are often severe: a visceral, bilious reaction to any arrangement of blond styled hair; an inexplicable near suicidal aversion to phrases like 'phenomenal', 'so sad', 'fake', 'loser' and 'you gotta think'. Dotus sufferers can be rendered insensate by the distinctive Tweeting sound on a smart phone denoting the arrival of another attack of Dotus. Sadly we at Pharma-Pluss foresee no cure in the near future.

Pot o' Gold!

Around the world investors are rushing to cash in on the relaxing of legal restrictions on the production and use of tetrahydrocannabinol. Indeed, many countries are adopting it a panacea for addressing their non-functional health-care systems. Lead brands like POTUS claim that they are able to cater to a mushrooming population of those who have ‘pre-existing conditions’. They can provide a wide spectrum solutions for everything ranging from PTSD (now affectionately renamed POTSY) to advanced necrosis of the liver or climate change derangement syndrome. But this medical revolution goes far beyond transforming our medical centres into ‘happy places’. Magnus Ping, the CEO of POTUS explains, “We are working to transform the lifestyle of our population encompassing all stages of life from baby formula to geriatric homes. There are huge economic benefits here to be reaped by all parties. The Zoomers have now morphed into the “Whoopers” “Diets are being transformalgated as we speak. The devastation wreaked upon the planet by “meat and 2 veg” troglodytes is being medrulted by campaigns to reductify food kilomiles to less than zeero-bezreero! Even fast food chains are getting into the act. Bendy’s and Burger Kink have found their Mari-burgers launch has been so successful that clients are no longer asking ‘Where’s the Meat’. The ubiquitous Big Mac has been transformed into the Merry Mac. This launch has been so successful that on-site parking has become a problem with many of their clients staying for days at a time. But as Ping chimes, ‘We see a real solution to the food miles challenge, it is easier to bring the punters to the trough than vice versa.’ The popular French chain ‘Pot au Vin’ has designated exclusive ‘appelations’ for its most vapoured brands and set up a nomination controlée. The #MeToo movement has enthusiastically endorsed ‘Blunt’ as a proven antidote to Viagra and looks forward to a time when prescribed use between certain ages of life will be obligatory. Meanwhile across the swamp the British anchor brand Stoneleigh’s has found a huge market for their product as Article 50 Brexit negotiations have been extended for another 20 years. Stoneleigh boasts a long proud history of ‘Shipping Tea to China’ and they well understand the huge profits to be reaped when havoc can be wreaked. Even Middle Eastern Crown Princes are getting into the act, identifying an effective way to diversify their economies to different types of oil which are also proving more effective in dismembering opposition movements. None though rival the success of POTUS in the Americas which has cashed in on rampant PTSD (Post Trump Stress Disorder) with its market leader POTSY.

Brexit Deal - Racks up Huge Success in Stopping All Freedom of Movement

Ending freedom of Movement was always high on the Brexiteers wish list. Many Brexivisionaries were willing to make major sacrifices on behalf of future generations of Brexetians in order to call a halt to the mindless expenditure of energy involved in going places. The peace that has broken out over the realm has been deafening. Planes have been grounded and the skies again made safe for curlews and buzzard-auks. Major traffic arteries can now be repurposed as caravan sites which promise to grow into stable communities in a future Prosperous Brexetia.

The Minister for General Well-Being is currently on a trade mission to Japan where she is studying alternative infrastructures.

The Boudicca Encampment pictured below is a triumph of the Brexetian forward thinking planning strategy. It combines a solution to the housing crisis with stable community infrastructure with the intensive reuse of superannuated assets. The recently appointed Minster for General Well-being is taking a conservative step-by step approach to developing her new portfolio, currently touring the Nara Isuiuen Gardens of Japan and studying traditional modes of movement which consume considerably less energy and help to de-stress modern life.

Economists Unite in Scoring Life as We Know It

Treasury Economists now lead the world in applying complex algorithms to predict performance of the economy related to every nuance of government policy. Moments before the parliamentary debate on Brexit options, they released precise figures outlining the effects of each type of Brexit on the economy in order to help inform the debate. This resulted in a ‘deficit spectrum’ ranging between 3.627% and 10.491% depending on model selected. (House prices would collapse by 31.27% in 87.29% of the country.) Fortunately, they explained, the millennial boost should ameliorate some of these losses by an uplift of 2.837%. However, climate change and the destruction of habitat will adversely affect this overall by 11.4275% all slightly offset by the 2.817% decrease in heating bills for pensioners over 83 years old. Luckily robotic enhancement of worker productivity will account for an improvement of 17.2815% which will be somewhat offset by the costs of the senescence and aftercare of baby boomers over the next century and a half of 42.81375% Biomedical advances and savings on health care is a big winner at 4.21% which is slightly offset by increased solar flares at minus .6% The greatest down side however is a loss of 47.217% in general depression induced by economic statisticians. This is expected to be augmented by a factor of 3.14159 by the time the politicians work their magic upon the figures.

Another New Red Book !! The Smallish Book of Thoughts of Chairman Meow

Affectionately known to his admirers as ‘Chairman Meow’, the Vice-DOTUS of USA-lone has begun to emerge as an independent force now that the DOTUS has barricaded himself into the White House. Recently Meow has used his platform at the APEC Conference in Borneo to strike out with an alternative vision to the Chinese Belt and Road Project. Extolling his ‘Little Red Book’ which he describes as an ‘update on the Ten Commandments’, he savaged the growing Chinese propensity for cultural imperialism. “Rapacious Sino-capitalists are seeking to set up colonial outposts in parts of the world that the US has always benignly neglected. “Places like Zamidia and Talibistan are suddenly in the cross-hairs of godless Sino aggression. Sino-guerrillas are constructing one-way bridges and roads around the world and catapulting freedom loving people like US into an immigration crisis as hordes of jihadi immigrants, desperate to avoid those only-too-easy roads to perdition, invade our borders from hostile territories like Canada and Nunavit. “But such attempts to breach our great Walls of righteousness will come to naught. “We will tolerate no Chinks in our wall. They have not reckoned with the power of our Redeemer or His

The diet of Grand Brexetians is currently undergoing radical transformation and an exciting future of home-produced foods lies ahead as the country continues to build walls against unregulated incursions of goods and people. For those who claim to tire of our staple diet of Algaetatoes, however well-balanced and nutritious, some of the new free trade options may appear seductive. Colonies from our imperial heyday are stepping up to the mark to offer an enticing range of produce to compensate for those quizlings who claim to miss French Champagne or Belgian chocolates. Among our new trading partners, the Nigerian government is generously planning to make available to GeeBee’s unlimited quantities of surplus mangoes. They are almost certain to become one of the staples of the GeeBee diet. Mangos have proven effective in reducing the incidence of scurvy and rickets. They can be combined with Algaetatoes to create astonishing range of colours and textures. Our Great GeeBee Bake-off recently highlighted the many uses that mangoes and paw-paws can be put to in delivering a truly mouth-watering new national cuisine. The new Minister of Ordinary Folk, Boris Johnson, a great advocate of what he jocularly styles the “Picaninny Diet”, is helping to expedite the first airlift of Abuja Mangos into the heartlands of Grand Brexetia.

determination to mobilise the full forces of God’s Country to thwart their satanic machinations through Operation Fatuous Patriot. We pride ourselves that we have never engaged in cultural imperialism. We have offered desperately needed aid to countries as far out as Saudi Arabia. Our dollar has provided a level playing field that countries around the world have clamoured to be allowed to mow. For years our charitable instincts have been tested in places like Minga Pinga and Afgapradesh. But we have never turned our backs on these suppliants. “Meanwhile nefarious Sino-expansionists are luring over 50,000 Africans to study in China on all expense paid scholarships. Instead of going to Harvard or Princeton, these deluded quislings are being seduced and indoctrinated with alien cultural norms and Unchristian values. They are educating people in new-fangled farming processes and attempting to transform the world’s last remaining great deserts into productive farmlands. Great deserts like good fences make good neighbours, but the Chinese opportunists are instead riddling them with jihadi corridors of opportunity. These Sino-expansionists were not even included in our Christian Bible. Our Lord knew the kinds of depths that they could sink to and did not dignify them with even a mention.”

Deep Mind

Google infrastructural developers who spent a record £400 M on the purchase of Deepmind, the Brexetia National Health Service records, are now seeking to expand this database to cover the balance of the freebee world. They are well placed to gather information on every aspect users’ lives. To provide its data constituents absolute peace of mind, Google has given iron-clad assurances that they would never in a billion years contemplate the commercialisation and exploitation of their invaluable resource by selling this information to insurance companies or advertisers.

Jeff Bejezuz of Amazzin is submitting a competitive bid. He is on record promising, “A lot of the hysteria has been artificially whipped up over such issues as insurers’ withholding insurance to known risk clients with pre-existing conditions. I can reassure our Googleverse that all our 275,000 operatives with privileged access to this database will be scrupulously i-screened, i-trained and i-indoctrinated in the i-mportance of maintaining patient confidentiality. The data base will be used only to study overall trends and predict future pressures on the system.

‘Anglo Fish for Anglo Anglers’ was one of the cries de coeur of the Brexetian campaign. SPLUNCHBOX.COM

Let's face it sport is really all about scoring a cute partner. A new twist in the on-line dating phenomenon has given rise to a new designation of urban life - the Spornosexual. Splunchbox.com, catering to this new niche in the market, is the latest web-match site to help pair up those with nothing else much on their minds. Spornosexuals are young men and women whose lives revolve around their local gym. Here they choose to present themselves defiantly 'in the box'. They may hold down dreary daytime jobs but as soon as they are released from daily purgatory they hasten to the box where, embracing treadmills and mega hoick tires, their spirits soar.

It soon becomes a life obsession. When they drag themselves home depleted from their workout, they will spend sleepless nights devising fiendish new routines of torquemada-torture. They paw through top-shelf magazines and access exclusive encrypted websites, slaving to get their next fix in pursuits that narrowly skirt Geneva Convention on Cruel and Inhumane Self-Treatment.

Sports Score High on Brexetia Bucket List

Brexetia justifiably credits itself with bringing the rules of good sportsmanship to the world. The whole concept of 'fair play', 'it matters not who wins or loses' and 'wait till you see the whites of their eyes' originated in Anglo Saxony. While the French got no further than boules and the Aztecs were eviscerating losers, Brexetians were devising fiendishly complex rules for cricket. It should be no surprise then that Brexetia's recently installed Minister for Education and Happiness, Septimus Rees-Pooch is promoting the initiative Equipping Brexetians for Tomorrow - The Bucket List.

Sport is a key to creating less well-rounded citizens. The Ministry has published his bucket list of life experiences that promote social interaction and do not rely on a flickering screen. Competitive sports such as Croquet and Quoits are rated highly. Many of these sports have mediaeval origins. Jousting and sabre rattling, with appropriate health and safety regulation and updated to meet today's requirements, are enjoying a unexpected resurgence. The Minister claims "The youth of today should be prevented from spending their lives in twilight Fantasyland, merely living vicariously. Through our Bucket List we fully intend to bring them a healthy dose of reality. We want to see our children growing up with practical skills, like épée and embroidery."

Many sports though have had to be reimaged due to safety concerns. Football is being promoted with prosthetic legs to obviate cartilage damage. Polo has now been 'rebirthed' using golf carts equipped with anti-crash sensors. This has proven a tremendous crowd pleaser. Quoits, Cornhole and even Wack-a-Mole have enjoyed unexpected renaissances and some of the principal universities are offering advanced scholarship assisted degrees in archaic sports, once deemed passé. Students from around the world are once again clamouring to enrol in Brexetia's top university sports programmes.

Algal Tourism

'Going Green' has taken on new connotations in the People's Republic

China is positioning itself to capitalise on an unexpected demand for "Going Green" through specially designated spas strung out along the Belt and Road connecting Tientsin to Reykjavik. Environmental visioners anticipate major health resorts, an 'Avenue of Jade Billows', located in the new industrial heartlands strung out along this co-posterity initiative. The coastlines of the Peoples Republic are beginning to resemble Florida's with massive algal blooms that discourage golfers. Chinese entrepreneurs, however, have devised new ways of exploiting this resource, and not only as a foodstuff. Millions have been converted to the craze for 'going green' The health effects of 'mounding' or covering oneself in slimy green algae and basking for hours in a meditative trance are not to be underestimated. However, skeptics have ascribed the current uptick in Algal tourism to misguided spelling, a glitch in a ZTE algae-rythm.

decided to come out in my new identity as Staggie!

I can promise you that Staggie is into tough love and isn't likely to put up with any more losers or your wussey nonsense and pathetic injustices. Staggie is into winning bigly. So my message to you this Christmas is to spread around a bit of that tough love. Call out those losers when you see 'em. Just keep asking them "What Would Jesus Do?" By Applying the WWJD? principle you get to see the divine plan. God wants you to be pro-prosperous.

It's all set out in his own words in Revelations and places like that. Jesus sure wasn't some liberal, left wing commie with a fancy Facebook site.

Sophitocles Arachniad spontaneously combusts

Now playing at the Hart in Hand, the Arachniad is a new play based on an updated retranslation of Sophopitocles famous trilogy in four parts. In the immortal words of William Shakespeare 'One person's comedy is another person's tragedy.' This is truly borne out by the latest production of the Arachniad presented by Hart in Hand in Middle Monk Street., Abergavenny This complex tale of fluid sexual identities focusses on three sets of transgender twins who discover that their invitro father was tainted by genetic sequences derived from controversial sources. The unfolding action is truly a convoluted web of deceipts. Perhaps paraphrasing William Shakespeare, Sophiticoles is reputed to have claimed, "Time may be short for those who celebrate, but it will seems interminable to those who have to sit through my play!"

Air Pollution Shown to Improve Sporting Performance

Recent studies published by the American EPA have proven conclusively that Air Pollution can be beneficial to human health. These findings are beginning to resonate around the world with Chinese and Indian environmentalists breathing a deep sigh of relief that they will remain at the forefront of healthy engineered environments. A n E P A spokes-bot explains, "It's not rocket science. For millions of years human beings used to hang out playing cards in smokefilled huts while dinosaurs rampaged around outside. We've naturally evolved a resistant gene which needs the challenge of such adverse conditions."

Sportsmen, in particular, should be keen to build up their stamina and maximise immunities. There are good reasons to believe that the continued stellar performance of Chinese athletes is directly attributable to their bracing environmental challenges. Statistics produced by the Heartland Institute appear to indicate that in many cases the air in modern cities it 'too clean' to effectively build up the immune systems of urbanites. Heartland spokesperson Dr Morefor Profett decries all the scare stories about deteriorating lungs, heart and brain health. "Modern air is way too clean for optimum health. Studies have proven conclusively that if you molly-coddle human life forms the immune system tends to atrophy and become indolent, we call this phenomenon effer-senescence," he explained to a receptive audience at the American Association for the Advancement of Scientific Science (AA-ASS), one of the world's best funded scientific bodies. "After all, it turns out everybody needs a bit of immune-system-boosting dirt in their lungs."
